Amdocs Limited Class Action Investigation

U.S. Securities Litigation

Amdocs Investigation Overview

BFA is investigating whether Amdocs Limited committed securities fraud by misleading investors about the progress it was making under agreements with T-Mobile. Investors may be able to file a class action to potentially recover losses.

Why is Amdocs being investigated for Securities Fraud?

Amdocs is being investigated for securities fraud following a significant stock drop. The decline in Amdocs' stock price caused significant losses to investors.

Amdocs is a software and services provider for telecom companies. Earlier this year, Amdocs announced a multi-year agreement with T-Mobile. Under the agreement, Amdocs was to provide managed services, software development, and AI innovation to support T-Mobile's consumer business and systems integration efforts.

Why did Amdocs Stock Drop?

On November 3, 2026, Amdocs revealed that it was "facing a dispute concerning the recently signed agreement with T-Mobile, which escalated into a legal dispute during the last quarter." In connection with the dispute, Amdocs provided disappointing 2027 guidance, which assumed "termination of our agreements with T-Mobile." The company anticipated a 7%–11% decline in pro forma constant-currency revenue and a 26%–30% decline in non-GAAP diluted EPS.

Following that announcement, Amdocs shares fell approximately 30% on November 4, 2026.
