Capricor Therapeutics, Inc. Class Action Investigation

U.S. Securities Litigation

Capricor Investigation Overview

BFA is investigating whether Capricor Therapeutics, Inc. committed securities fraud by making false and misleading statements to investors regarding Deramiocel, its investigational cell therapy for Duchenne muscular dystrophy, and the clinical trial data supporting its regulatory submissions. Investors may be able to file a class action to potentially recover losses.

Why is Capricor being investigated for Securities Fraud?

Capricor is being investigated for securities fraud following a significant stock drop. The decline in Capricor's stock price caused significant losses to investors.

Capricor Therapeutics is a biotechnology company developing cell and exosome-based therapeutics for rare diseases. Its lead product candidate, Deramiocel, is an investigational cell therapy being developed for Duchenne muscular dystrophy.

BFA is investigating whether Capricor misled investors about Deramiocel's clinical data, including the company's statements concerning positive topline results and its regulatory path with the FDA.

Why did Capricor's Stock Drop?

On July 27, 2026, the FDA released briefing documents ahead of an advisory committee meeting concerning Deramiocel. The FDA briefing documents reportedly raised concerns about post-hoc changes to Capricor's statistical analysis plan, including changes to the methodology for calculating the primary endpoint, PUL 2.0, shortly before the database was unlocked and unblinded.

This news caused the price of Capricor stock to decline $12.70 per share, or 64.5%, from a closing price of $19.70 per share on July 24, 2026, to $7.00 per share on July 27, 2026, the following trading day.
