Why is IBM being investigated for Securities Fraud?

IBM is being investigated for securities fraud following a significant stock drop. The decline in IBM's stock price caused significant losses to investors.

IBM is a global technology and consulting company that focuses on hybrid cloud and artificial intelligence. IBM uses IBM Z to deliver enhanced AI acceleration through multi-model AI capabilities, low unit cost architecture at scale for workloads that require end-to-end encryption, continued availability, and ultra-high throughput.

BFA is investigating whether IBM misled investors about its pace of securing large deals and the strength of its IBM Z outlook.

Why did IBM's Stock Drop?

On July 14, 2026, IBM released its 2026 Q2 financial results. IBM announced a disappointing quarter that it attributed to "a shortfall in our Z performance and the associated software stack, primarily in Transaction Processing." IBM also revealed that it had "faltered," and "did not adapt and move quickly enough" so that "numerous large deals failed to close on the timelines we expected, driving the majority of our shortfall."

This news caused the price of IBM stock to decline over $75 in intraday trading on July 14, 2026, or over 25%.
