Why is Kinross Being Sued for Securities Fraud?

Kinross has been sued for securities fraud following a significant stock drop resulting from alleged violations of the federal securities laws. The decline in Kinross' stock price caused significant losses to investors.

Kinross is a Canadian gold mining company with regional offices and mining facilities in the United States and abroad. Notably, Kinross operates Round Mountain, an open-pit gold mine in Nye County, Nevada.

According to the complaint, Kinross projected 2026 attributable production of 2.0 million gold equivalent ounces and repeatedly assured investors that it was "[o]n track to meet annual guidance" and "remain[ed] solidly on track to produce 2 million ounces."

As alleged, Defendants failed to disclose that Kinross did not have the necessary resources and was otherwise ill-equipped to achieve its projections.

Why did Kinross' Stock Drop?

On September 23, 2026, Kinross issued an "Operational and Return of Capital Update" mid-quarter. In the release, Kinross cut full year 2026 and 2027 attributable production guidance to 1.84 million to 1.86 million gold equivalent ounces. Kinross attributed the cut, in significant part, to ore recovery challenges at Round Mountain. The company later disclosed these challenges were operational in nature and were likely due to the use of oversized tools and machinery in the mining process.

On this news, Kinross stock dropped $3.20 per share, or 11.5%, from a closing price of $27.62 per share on September 23, 2026, to $24.42 per share on September 24, 2026.
