

Six Flags Entertainment Corporation Class Action Investigation

U.S. Securities Litigation

Six Flags Investigation Overview

BFA is investigating whether Six Flags Entertainment Corporation committed securities fraud by misleading investors about its focus on safety, maintenance, and ride reliability after an Atlanta man died and several others were injured aboard one of its roller coasters in Georgia. Investors may be able to file a class action to potentially recover losses.

Why is Six Flags being investigated for Securities Fraud?

Six Flags is being investigated for securities fraud following a significant stock drop. The decline in Six Flags' stock price caused significant losses to investors.

Six Flags is the largest regional amusement resort operator in North America, with 20 amusement parks, 14 water parks and nine resort properties in the U.S., Canada, and Mexico.

BFA is investigating whether Six Flags misled investors about its focus on safety, maintenance, and ride reliability.

Why did Six Flags' Stock Drop?

On October 12-13, 2026, various news outlets reported that a man died and several others were injured aboard Six Flags' Goliath roller coaster in Georgia. After the fatal incident, Six Flags announced the temporary closure of 10 roller coasters, including Goliath, across various amusement parks.

Following the news, Six Flags shares fell approximately 14.4% on October 13, 2026.
