Why is York Space Systems Being Sued for Securities Violations?

York Space Systems has been sued for securities violations following significant a stock drop. The decline in York Space Systems' stock price caused significant losses to investors.

York Space Systems operates as a space and defense provider that primarily sells satellites and satellite-related services. According to the complaint, 96% of York Space Systems' fiscal 2025 revenue was derived from projects contracted by the U.S. Federal Government under the Pentagon's Space Development Agency, with most of those projects under the SDA's Transport Layer program.

According to the complaint, York Space Systems touted the Company's successful launches with the SDA, its incumbent position leading into future Transport Layer tranches, and its proprietary satellite software.

As alleged, Defendants overstated the capabilities of York Space Systems' satellite software.

Why did York Space Systems' Stock Drop?

On May 11, 2026, Wolfpack Research published a report stating that former employees of York Space Systems claimed the company sent satellites into space without knowing whether the software was fit to accomplish its basic mission. The report further stated that York Space Systems' satellites did not function as expected because the company did not finish developing the software before launch and instead waited until the satellites were in orbit to debug them.

On this news, York Space Systems' stock price dropped $3.91 per share, or 10.9%, from a closing price of $35.88 per share on May 11, 2026, to $31.97 per share on May 12, 2026.
