

BFA Attorneys Publish Article in October 2025 NAPPA Report

BFA attorneys Javier Bleichmar, Benjamin Burry, Nancy Kulesa, Erin Woods, and Brandon Slotkin recently authored an article titled “Bridging the Political Divide: Conservative and Liberal Perspectives Agree on the Benefits of Class Actions,” published in the October 2025 National Association Public Pension Attorneys (NAPPA) Report.

The article offers a bipartisan case for continued engagement and leadership in securities fraud litigation. The authors explain how both conservative and liberal principles support class actions as an essential mechanism for protecting investors, promoting market integrity, and upholding the rule of law. The piece emphasizes the important role public pension funds play in safeguarding retirement assets and ensuring accountability in the financial markets.
